

Hyrum Manwaring

Our young men and women are not merely shifting particles of sand resting insecurely on the face of the earth; here today and gone tomorrow. They are living, growing, self-directing individuals. While each is surrounded with the rich phenomena of God's earth and sky, he, by his own struggle and daily experience, is building an acceptable world in which to live. Some struggle vigorously to push back the horizon and live in a world rich in sights and sounds, while others are content to live in a world of dull, dark mediocrity. If each builds his own earth and heaven by his obedience and untiring toil, each should be up and at his task while youth, vigor and fervent faith are at his service.
